

EM-Assist Joint Venture Wins Major Air Force Contract

LAYTON, UT – January 10, 2012 – Systems Sustainment Alliance, a joint venture formed and led by EM-Assist, won a U.S. Air Force engineering and support contract with a $1.9 billion ceiling. The Design and Engineering Support Program III (DESP III) Indefinite Delivery / Indefinite Quantity (IDIQ) contract is a 5-year, multiple-award task order contract with a broad scope that allows EM-Assist to provide environmental services, information management and technology, and training solutions to the Air Force and other Department of Defense clients.

EM-Assist President Lynn Meland said, “With the DESP III contract, Department of Defense clients located anywhere in the world can work with us. The high-capacity contract has a 5-year ordering period and a 7-year period of performance, so this brings our clients yet another convenient contracting mechanism that allows them to work consistently with EM-Assist for many years.”

EM-Assist is the lead partner in the Systems Sustainment Alliance joint venture. Other joint venture partners include Affordable Engineering Services, a company specializing in weapon systems engineering and logistics, and Thomas Instrument, a company specializing in manufacturing and qualification testing. Teaming partners include AC4 Solutions, ATTI, Boeing, Eagle Systems, Interface Display, NexOne, Mainstream GS, Millennium, SoBran, Solution One, SRC, SSAI, Sumaria, Transtecs, US Dynamics, US Space Alliance, and Zenetex.
